#OceanRunnerNH: The secret behind sea glassSea Glass

Sea glass is essentially pieces of glass, ground smooth by the action of the sea. Taking anything from 20 to 100 years to complete the process, the end results can be exquisite. Finding pieces of sea glass that are similar enough to put into a single piece or matched set of earrings is quite rare. This does mean, though, that each finished piece of jewellery will be utterly unique.

Sea glass comes from ordinary glass that's somehow ended up in the water. It could be glass bottles and jars that were tossed into the waves - true trash to treasure. Some of the most beautiful pieces come from places that had a glassworks nearby.

30 Sea Glass Ideas & Projects - Lovely Greens

It takes about 30 years for the ocean to break down glass into sea treasure, and not all beaches are capable of creating it, which is why a good sea glass beach is hard to find. The best options are usually near former dumping grounds, where there is consistent wave movement. But seeking these beaches out is well worth the effort.

Where to Find the World's Most Extraordinary Beach Sea Glass

Sea glass is produced from glass discarded in the sea. Over time the ocean, sand and pebbles pummel the jagged glass edges, smoothing and rounding them. Most sea glass is white or green. Blue or red

Sea Glass by Archie

The waste glass or "end of day glass" was discarded into the sea and now, 170 years later, the glass, once waste, has been tumbled, frosted and transformed into little pebbles of beauty. The designs of my artwork will vary slightly as each piece of glass is unique and varies in tone and shape which makes it so special.
