In his second book of narrative, lyric poetry, Richard Blanco explores the familiar, unsettling journey for home and connections, those anxious musings about other lives. ÓShould I live here? Could I live here?Ó Whether the exotic (ÓIÓm struck with Maltese fever ÓI dream of buying a little Maltese farmÓ) or merely different (ÓToday, home is a cottage with morning in the yawn of an open windowÓ), he examines the restlessness that threatens from merely staying put, the fear of too many places and too little time. The words are redolent with his Cuban heritage: Marina making mole sauce; T ' a Ida bitter over the revolution, missing the sisters who fled to Miami; his father, especially, Óhis hair once as black as the black of his oxfordsÓ Yet this is a volume for all who have longed for enveloping arms and words, and for that sanctuary called home. ÓSo much of my life spent like this-suspended, moving toward unknown places and names or returning to those I know, corresponding with the paradox of crossing, being nowhere yet here.Ó Blanco embraces juxtaposition. There is the Cuban Blanco, the American Richard, the engineer by day, the poet by heart, the rhythms of Spanish, the percussion of English, the first-world professional, the immigrant, the gay man, the straight world. There is the ennui behind the question: why cannot I not just live where I live? Too, there is the precious, fleeting relief when he can write "ÓI am, for a moment, not afraid of being no more than what I hear and see, no more than this..." It is what we all hope for, too.
