What follows is a rambling autobiography of one such person -- me." From start to finish, the autobiography is suffused with references to Gardner's religious beliefs. In a prologue he explains he is a "mysterian" -- an adherent to a philosophy that no-one can understand or explain how consciousness emerges from a material brain.

Gardner . . . Autobiography Of Martin

Much of his fiction, it is revealed, has an autobiographical aspect to it, perhaps an indication of how he felt the wonders and eccentricities of the real world supplied enough enchantment to eclipse that of anything purely fabricated, the magic of our world being the Undiluted Hocus-Pocus of the title. This point of view he makes very explicit with respect to what he refers to as "pseudoscience", against which he aimed much of his writing, and in which he succeeded in uncovering a number of . . .
